This report records your recommendations, saved evidence and reflections as a student observer. Recommendations and reconstructed conversations are learning activities, not records of the historical figures' choices. No automated grade is assigned.

CHAPTER 1 · FEBRUARY 1942 · BEFORE THE SURRENDER

Singapore: the people left behind

What will you put in place before leaving Singapore, and whose needs might your decision leave unresolved?

MY RECOMMENDATION

Recommend support for the household

Prioritise a clear family support arrangement in the scenario.

Trade-off: The departure preparations receive less of your attention.

Illustrated consequence: The household side receives your recommendation. It makes family responsibilities visible, but a plan cannot guarantee safety.

Evidence attached to this decision: A family behind the public figure

My evidence notes

> Family commitments remained even when Lim left. The biography does not tell us every household arrangement.
>
> A family behind the public figure

Historical boundary

Lim left before Singapore fell. The neighbourhood and proposed preparations are reconstructions. Named figures are historical; dialogue and animated choices are not recorded conversations or decisions. Elizabeth and the food records are later evidence encounters, not people or objects documented at this departure.

CHAPTER 2 · LATE 1943–EARLY 1944 · BEFORE LIM'S CAPTURE

Malaya: what can you rely on?

What is strong enough evidence to act on—and what uncertainty must you carry with you?

MY RECOMMENDATION

Seek a second perspective

Bring source claims together and separate observation from interpretation.

Trade-off: The decision takes longer.

Illustrated consequence: The figures gather at the table. Your recommendation puts accounts alongside one another rather than counting them as votes.

Evidence attached to this decision: Account C: a gathering with mixed feelings

My evidence notes

> Tan's retrospective account describes mixed feelings. A remembered mood cannot establish what every recruit felt.
>
> Account C: a gathering with mixed feelings

Historical boundary

These are source-reasoning decisions, not a reenactment of Lim's capture. No choice can prevent his documented arrest or turn historical suffering into a player failure. The coastal setting condenses the regional journey, not a verified landing site. The training accounts are retrospective, and no documented meeting among these figures is asserted.

MAKING SENSE OF THE EXPERIENCE

My final reflections

My explanation

Beyond personal courage, what made resistance possible? Use your notes to explain a cost for civilians and one limitation of your evidence.

Selected claim: Resistance depended on local cooperation and material support.

Resistance depended on cooperation and practical support. Civilians could bear costs even when they were not fighters.

Evidence I cited

> Family commitments remained even when Lim left. The biography does not tell us every household arrangement.
>
> A family behind the public figure

Testing my explanation

Which source supports your explanation? Distinguish a reconstruction that felt convincing from evidence that establishes a historical claim. Does Singapore evidence prove what happened in Perak?

Selected claim: Resistance depended on local cooperation and material support.

The sources have different limits. A retrospective memory is not proof of everyone's feelings, and Singapore records do not establish what happened in a particular Perak household.

Evidence I cited

> Tan’s retrospective account describes mixed feelings. A remembered mood cannot establish what every recruit felt.
>
> Account C: a gathering with mixed feelings

EVIDENCE AND PROVENANCE

Sources in my record

A family behind the public figure

NHB biographical account · National Heritage Board · Roots

Source limit: A commemorative biography selects and interprets a life. It does not record the conversations or choices enacted in this game.

Account C: a gathering with mixed feelings

1994 published account · guidebook adaptation, p. 63 · Tan Chong Tee, as adapted in the supplied Sec 2 guidebook; full original account not independently verified

Source limit: A school adaptation of a later publication. Memory, selection and the precise occasion need checking. The linked article explains oral-history context and is not the original of this account.

APPENDIX · RECONSTRUCTED DIALOGUE

My conversations

Student questions are preserved below. Character responses are educational reconstructions, not historical quotations.

Chapter 1 · Singapore: the people left behind

Lim Bo Seng

Public duty and family both matter. The record shows that I left Singapore before its fall. What would you want to know before judging that decision?

Chapter 2 · Malaya: what can you rely on?

Student → Lim Bo Seng

Could a source prove <everyone> felt the same?

The Cost of Resistance · Standalone classroom demo · Keep claims, evidence and uncertainty distinct.
